His scaptre is a ratile. His tarone is mother's arms; He reigns a tiny tyrant, in all his dimpled charms ! Tet round his royal presence Our loving hearts entwine;

and king by right divine ! Whatever be his mandates. Whatever oe nis mandates,
No courtiers date rebel;
His mother's chief of the household,
Prime minister as well I
In you perambulator,
His downy car of state,
Fracting rosy monarch.

Exacting, rosy monarch, What triumphs on him wait!

In purple case and spiendor,
Long, long he seeks to reign;
All hints of nose disjointed
He smiles at with disdais !
Alas! that royal greatness
Should ever be disowned;
Here comes a tiny stranger—
King Baby is dethroned.

[From The Aldine for November. THE "CODE OF HONOR."

The Last Duelling in England and Scotland.

[From Appleton's Journal.]

The last public duel between Englishmen in England occurred in 1845. **Ouring the ten previous years Mr. Roebuck had fought with Mr. Black; Hon. Grantley Berkley with Mr. Magin; Lord Castlereagh with Mr. Meley; the Marquis of Londonderry with Mr. Henry Grattan; Lord Cardigan with Captain Tuckett, and Colonel Fawcett with Lieutenant Monroe. Five years earlier—in 1829—the Duke of Wellington had challenged and fought the Earl of Winchelsea. This last affair of honor was really the epoch of duelling in England. The old Duke never said as much—indeed, he always thought lightly of duelling—but there is little doubt that he regarded his meeting Winchelsea in the field as the most absurd transaction of Melife. Wellington was prime minister. He had brought in the "Roman Catholic Relief Bill." The Earl of Winchelsea opposed it, and said that the whole thing was done under false pretences. A prodigious correspondence [From Appleton's Journal.] and said that the whole thing was done under false pretences. A prodigious correspondence ensued, ending with the Duke's writing: "For this insuit, I believe that his Lordship will be anxious to give me reparation." Now, "reparation" in duelling parlance is the same as "satisfaction," and it is quite evident that this is what the old warrior was driving at. The Earl, however, without retracing, continued beating the bush until he received a note in these words:

these words:

"I now call upon your Lordship to give me that satisfaction for your conduct which a gentleman has a right to require, and which a gentleman never refuses to give. I have the honor, &c."

"Wellington,"

nonor, &c.,

To this the Earl replied:

"The satisfaction which your Grace has demanded, it is, of course, impossible for me to decline. I have the honor to be, &c.,

"WINCHELSEA."

Accordingly, the parties met at Battersea Fields the next morning, the Duke attended by Sir Henry Hardinge, the Earl by Lord Falmonth. The ground having been measured and the places taken by the principals, at the word "Fire!" the Duke raised his pistol, but seemed to heeltate, for he saw that the Earl Kept his pistol pointing to the ground, evidently not intending to fire. He then fired a random. The Earl did not discharge his pistol. Thereupon Lord Falmouth stepped forward and delivered a memorandum to Sir Henry Hardinge, expressing the Earl's regret, and the parties separated. Upon a subsequent inquiry by a committee of the Honse, Lord Falmouth stated that the condition on which he consented to act as second to the Earl was that the latter should not fire at the Duke. This was certainly a very odd arrangement; but Lord Falmouth went on to say that "the Earl of Winchelsea thought that the logint power of the Honse, Lord Falmouth went on to say that "the Earl of Winchelsea thought that the logint to a mere apology, and that he coight to receive his fire." Was ever infatuation car had done the Duke of Wellington was too great for a mere apology, and that he ought to receive his fire." Was ever infatuation car ried further? Nothing can be more significant of the change that forty years have produced if public opinion, than that such a man as the Duke of Wellington should have felt it his duty to resort to a duel in vindication of his character.

In Scotland the duel that proved the knell of the departing custom occurred in 1822 between Sir Alexander Boswell and James Strart. The former, a considerable master of the control of t of the departing custom observed in James Stoart. The former, a considerable master of irony, had published a song in the Glasgow sentinel, containing imputations of cowardice against the latter. He was asked to disavow the authorship, but would not; to withdraw the imputation, but he declined; and, even after the matter became serious, to say that he intended no reflection upon Mr. Stuart's coursee, but he persisted in remaining silent. The meeting, therefore, was decided upon. In the carriage, on the way to the ground, Sir Alexander expressed his decided opinion that Mr. Stuart could have done nothing else than call him out. He also declared his intention to fire in the air, and on getting out of the carriage, he said:

"Now, gentlemen, observe it is my fixed resolution to fire in the air." Mr. Stuart's seelings seemed to have been equally forbear.

iselings seemed to have been equally forbearing...) He said that he had ne malice against Bir alterander; and, before anything took place; he saked his second, the Earl of Rosefyn. If it were not fit that he should make a bow to his opponent and express a wish for reconcillation. The Earl thought it right, and Mr. Stuart advanced toward right, and Mr. Stuart advanced toward Sir Alexander, apparently for that purpose, but the latter's back was turned, and he did not perceive the latention. Mr. Stuart's conduct, from first to last, was cool composed and temperate. The ground was then measured—twelve long paces. They took their positions, the pistols were handed to them, and the Earl of Rosslyn gave the word. At the first fire Sir Alexander fell, mortally wounded. After he fell he isaid he regretted he had not made his fire in the air more decided than it was. The ball isald he legretted he had not made his fire in the air more decided than it was. The ball had struck him in the shoulder, shattered the shoulder-blade, and was supposed to have entered the spine. Mr. Stuart savanced with great anxiety toward the fallen man, but the Earl of Rossiyn hurried him away. The unfortunate baronet was carried to the Balmuto House, where he expired.

Mr. Stuart was tried for wilful murder in the High Court of Judiciary, Edinburgh; but the jury, after a few minutes' consultation without leaving the box, returned a unanimous verdict of "not guilty."

GERMAN WAR APPARATUS. The New Arm.

A Berlin correspondent of the London Times writes: The increase of the troops and the improvement of the deadly machinery they neek keep pace with the erection of fresh deleaces. By the new orders of the Emperor, foreshadowed in this correspondence three months ago, the field artillery is raised to a war status of 2056 guns. This is four pieces more than the war force contemplated by M. Thiers, who, it is well knewn, is more than doubling his cannon. As a useful innovation, I may also mention by the way that the bag in which the cartridge is piaced will be henceforth made of silk, which cleanees the barrel from silme and dirt, and supersedes the necessity of wiping it out. Excepting the Bayarians, who retain the Werder rifle, the whole of the German forces have been armed The New Arm. from silme and dirt, and supersedes the necessity of whigh it out. Excepting the Bayarians, who retain the Werder rifle, the whole of the German forces have been armed with the improved needle-gun. As has been stated before, the improvement chiefly consists in a smaller builet, giving a range of 1200 metres. The new gun adopts the econothous lock of the breech which the Chassepot has, and being somewhat shorter and handler than the old one admits of from five to six salvos, and of from seven to ten rounds of quick fire being discharged in a minute. Taking aim is also said to be greatly simplified by the new rifle. But, with all its vanned advantages, this second edition of old preyse has only a few years to live. An altogether new model has been recently adopted, which, as soon as a couple of millions are made, will supersede everything else. What this latest novelty really is nobody knows. All we have been permitted to learn is that the murderous implement was origanly devised by a Wurthenburg gunsmith named Mauser, altered and imported by a physico-chymico artilleristic committee at Berlin, and that it gives to its happens and the sall that the gun really seems to mark a new stride in the terrible art of distance of the sall that the declaration of the strained has been restained by the reintroduction of the shranger for those places; and the counting of the sall that the sall that the declaration of the result in the sall that the provision of the object of the sense to the remainder of the term for which the said that the provision of the containt of the straint of the sall that the said that the provision of the containt of the straint of the straint of the straint of the sall that the said that the declaration of the straint of the sall that the said that the provision of
